Title:	Prof.
First name:	Adrianus (Arjen)
Last name:	Dondorp
Current position:	Deputy Director Mahidol Oxford Tropical Medicine Research Unit
Affiliation*:	University of Oxford
Country:	U.K./ Thailand
Bio: I am an infectious diseases and intensive care physician and was trained in the Netherlands. In 1999 I received my PhD from the University of Amsterdam on a thesis evaluating aspects of the pathophysiology of severe falciparum malaria. Since 2001 I have been based at the Mahidol Oxford Tropical Medicine Research Unit in Bangkok Thailand where I am the Deputy Director and head of the Malaria and Critical Illness Department. I am a Professor of Tropical Medicine at the University of Oxford, and Visiting Professor of Tropical Medicine at Mahidol University in Thailand. My main research interests include the pathophysiology and treatment of severe malaria, antimalarial drug resistance, new treatments for drug resistant falciparum malaria and the improvement of intensive care practice in developing countries. From 2012 until 2019, I chaired the Technical Expert Group on Antimalarial Drug Resistance and Containment (later renamed Drug Efficacy and Response) for the WHO Global Malaria Program. Since 2013, I chair the Regional Steering Committee (RSC) for the Regional Artemisinin-resistance Initiative (RAI) of the Global Fund for AIDS, TB and Malaria (http://www.raifund.org). I am an executive editor for the British Journal of Clinical Pharmacology. I have published over 440 papers in the international peer-reviewed literature.
