5.2.5 Work to be performed

Traditional health services represent not only a national cultural heritage but have also increasingly emerged as a significant element in the transformation of the national health system. Law of the Republic of Indonesia Number 17 of 2023 on Health stipulates that health efforts shall be undertaken comprehensively, encompassing promotive, preventive, curative and rehabilitative interventions, and Article 22 affirms traditional health services as an integral component of health efforts.

Data from the 2023 Indonesia Health Survey (SKI) indicate that more than 30% of the Indonesian population utilize traditional health services, including herbal formulations, skills-based practices, mind-body therapies, and energy-based modalities. Despite this significance, quality management in traditional health services continues to face systemic challenges, including the absence of standardized quality-of-care and patient safety frameworks, limited incident reporting and learning systems, and insufficient integration of quality and patient safety data into the national health information system.

In accordance with Article 178 paragraph (2) point (a) of Law No. 17/2023 and Presidential Regulation No. 28/2024 (Article 493 paragraph 2), the Central Government bears primary responsibility for ensuring the availability of traditional health services through the development of NSPK, facilitation of implementation, provision of human resources, and continuous monitoring and evaluation of service quality.

This initiative is aligned with the Ministry of Health-WHO Joint Workplan Biennium 2026-2027, the WHO General Programme of Work (GPW) 14 priorities. It constitutes a strategic contribution insofar as it is designed to be evidence-informed, draws on lessons learned from diverse regional contexts, and leverages multisectoral collaboration to reinforce an inclusive health system with a strong focus on patient safety.

In response to the complexity and broad scope of traditional health services, the development of quality guidelines is designed as a single NSPK encompassing both internal and external quality dimensions, rather than as separate standards for each service type. This guideline will comprise four core thematic modules: skills-based services, herbal-based services, human resources, and risk management. The approach is intended to provide a clear and unified regulatory framework, promote greater consistency in implementation across the diverse range of traditional health modalities, and enhance cost efficiency in its application.

The NSPK will also serve as the foundation for the implementation of the National Quality Indicators (INM) for traditional health services and for the conduct of a pilot project in six provinces. Through this approach, the outcomes of the initiative are expected not only to strengthen the national quality system, but also supporting the transformation of Indonesia's health system with a focus on quality, safety, and sustainable service delivery.
