1. Purpose of the assignment

Obtain a new social listening tool subscription to provide WHO Viet Nam and the Ministry of Health with online media monitoring and social listening data gathering support, long-term tool utilization training and other post-purchase services. This subscription will provide communication insights, rumor management and event-based surveillance, in order to strengthen response and preparedness capacity by addressing misinformation, identifying information gaps and delivering more influential messaging.

2. Background:

Although WHO has declared an end to COVID-19 as a Public Health Emergency of International Concern, COVID-19 continues to circulate in the community. In addition, due to routine immunization services being heavily impacted during the acute-phase of the pandemic, Viet Nam faces the significant risk of outbreaks of vaccine-preventable disease. Due to these risks, in Viet Nam and other countries, vaccines continue to remain a national, regional and global health priority.

However due to vaccine scepticism and fatigue in some parts of the community, it is critical, in accordance with WHO’s C4H approach, to continue to understand community health attitudes and behaviours, in particular regarding both COVID-19 vaccines and routine immunizations, in order to best inform communications messaging and activities.

It is increasingly important that during disease outbreak responses – whether emerging infectious diseases, like COVID-19, or other communicable diseases – systems for dynamic listening are in place – for health authorities to be able to answer what people are asking, address what worries them and counter misinformation that may affect their actions.

WHO Viet Nam continues to work with the Ministry of Health in enhancing systems for social listening. The WHO country office aims to enhance the use of social listening tools for the Ministry of Health risk communications focal point and have the data obtained through it embedded in regular and ad hoc risk communication activities in the country, particularly in developing and enhancing messages to the public. It is also important that social listening data are utilized beyond risk communication, which is why WHO Viet Nam will also support the Ministry of Health in systematizing the inclusion of such data in the system for multisource risk assessment in the country, and also as part of an adoption of the WHO’s C4H approach and its emphasis on more data-driven and informed communications.
This proposed APW contract will cover the media monitoring and social listening service package, which will include access to a social listening tool, utilization training and other post-purchase services.
